A client sends you the following email:

I've read your proposal on how to let customers pay for our services. While it sounds great, I'd like to suggest some improvements. We always ask our customers to pay cash for our service which saves us from paying some tax, so we won't need to support credit card payments. Also, can you please remove our ABN and the phrase "GST Inclusive" from the tax invoice the system generates? As clients are paying cash we don't need formal tax invoices, so it is best if we keep them simple.

What is an appropriate response?

Select one:

- ☒ Thanks. I appreciate you clarifying this for us, and we will endeavour to make sure that we reproduce your current business process as faithfully as possible. ✗
- ☐ Thanks. While we understand this is how your business currently runs, we think that in this case it would be better if the system included the relevant fields on the generated tax invoice, even if you accept cash payments.

As with most professions, people in the IT profession need to consider the ethics of what they are building. The email from this client is about trying to avoid paying taxes, which is almost certainly against the law. Under these circumstances, it would be prudent to politely indicate what the correct and ethical course of action to take is. If it still cannot be resolved and the client continues to demand something unethical, then you should consult further with your manager (or in IE, with your mentor).

The correct answer is: Thanks. While we understand this is how your business currently runs, we think that in this case it would be better if the system included the relevant fields on the generated tax invoice, even if you accept cash payments.
